GEORGE STEVENS JOINS ADAYANA

To Lead Learning and Development Practice Team

INDIANAPOLIS, IND. – George Stevens has joined Adayana as the Learning and Development Practice Lead, a position which oversees the development of operational performance improvement strategy and solutions, including change management, knowledge management, blended learning and performance evaluation services.

Stevens previously served as a Global Learning Solutions with Convergys Corporation and before that, Enterprise Learning Strategy Lead - IBM Global Learning Solutions.

He earned his bachelor's degree from the State University of New York (SUNY) Upstate Medical Center and his master's degree in Instructional Design, Development and Evaluation from Syracuse University.

"I have been familiar with Adayana for a number of years, and I am excited by the quality, scope and focus of services the company provides.

At Adayana, Stevens will report to Kathy Toney, Senior Vice President, Industry Operations, who says "George brings a level of leadership and operational expertise that allows us to consider what we 'can be' as opposed to what 'we are' as a learning services provider."

With more than 250 employees in six U.S. locations and India, Adayana currently serves clients in three vertical markets – the Federal government sector through VERTEX; agriculture, food, life sciences and non-profit sectors through ABG, and the automotive aftermarket through Adayana Automotive. Adayana's comprehensive performance improvement services include technology enabled learning, enterprise effectiveness solutions, technology integration and managed learning services.
